Ad hoc Benefit Crystallisation Events (BCE) and full crystallisation

- You can instruct ad hoc BCEs, including full crystallisations, online up to a payment amount of £75,000.

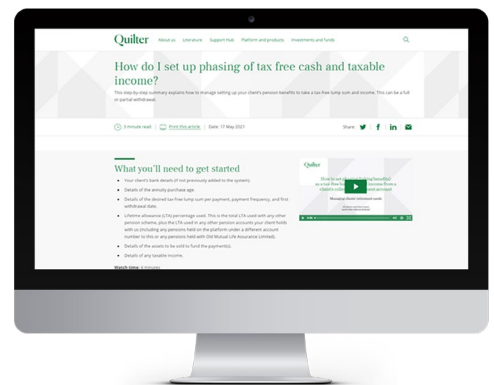

Timescales for ad hoc requests for tax free cash and income

- Payment of tax free cash and/or ad hoc income will be made within 10 days after your client's instruction is placed and accepted.*

if your client has investments that cannot be traded in whole or part, this can delay the payment of tax free cash, for example if your client has holdings inside a model portfolio that includes suspended funds. Please see our section on suspended funds for further details.*

Important crystallisation behaviours

- Full crystallisations from an account on a proportional basis, or from specific assets, where there is insufficient available cash to fund the PCLS payment, will result in a sell down of an extra 10% of the additional net cash required for the PCLS.

When new income instructions can be applied

For clients who are receiving a regular income withdrawal payment from their CRA, to safeguard their existing payments, there will be a 12 working day period in advance of their payment date where a new ad hoc income withdrawal instruction cannot be submitted. BCE instructions can continue to be submitted during this period.

Distributions

- For the ISA and CIA, distributions can be set to pay directly to your client.
- Our new system pays distributions direct, as soon as they're received from the fund manager.
- Previously 'natural income' payments were rolled up to a minimum of £25 and paid out at a frequency specified by your client. If your clients receive natural income, they're likely to see an increase in the number of payments they receive.
- Wrapper specific options, including leaving distributions in cash, re-investing or paying out to the client, are available.

Suspended funds

- Suspended funds cannot be used to fund withdrawals.
- Where a full crystallisation is requested, the calculation for tax free cash will depend on how your client holds their assets:
 - If the asset is held within a model portfolio, the value of the model portfolio is included in the calculation for tax free cash and providing there are sufficient tradeable assets to pay the maximum amount of tax free cash, then a full crystallisation can take place.
 - If loose assets are held, the value of the suspended fund is not included in the calculation of tax free cash.
- Where a partial crystallisation is being instructed from a model portfolio that includes a suspended fund, you have to unlink the account from the model portfolio before instructing the partial crystallisation. If you do not do this it could result in delays and manual interventions.
